Port High students get in the Christmas spirit by lending a hand

Port Washington High School freshmen (from left) Haley Leute, Elaina Perez and Piper Morgan were among the student volunteers who unloaded hundreds of fresh Christmas trees at the First Congregational Church lot at the corner of Grand Avenue and Webster Street across from the Niederkorn Library last week. The church's annual sale of trees and wreaths is one of its key fundraisers, and it has become tradition for Port High students to help with the heavy lifting of unloading the trees as part of the school's Port Pride program, which encourages community volunteerism.   Photo by Sam Arendt

Special thanks to church members Elaina Perez, Sam Pasten, Graham Garthus, Dylan Crain, and 22 Port Washington High School students who unloaded 465 Christmas trees in just under an hour on November 21. The students earned Port Pride volunteer hours and enjoyed pizza in Fellowship Hall. Thanks also to Elaina Perez and friends who attached beautiful bows to 30 wreaths which are available at the Christmas Tree Sale.
